It was a hot afternoon, and the hour-long bus journey had only just begun. There were only five people on the bus---two young girls and their brother, sitting with their aunt, and a young man, who was sitting alone in the ___36___.

The children were hot, tired, and bored, and acting ___37___. The younger girl was singing the first line of a song again and again. Everything the aunt said began with "Don't" and everything the children said began with "___38___".

"Don't put your feet on the seat, Cyril!"

"Why not?"

"Because you'll make it dirty. And don't always look at the man. That's not ___39___. Oh, look at those sheep in that field!"

Nearly every field the bus had travelled past had had sheep in it, so the aunt's ___40___ was difficult to explain. "Why is that shepherd (牧羊人) taking the sheep into the other field?" asked the younger girl.

"Perhaps there's more grass in that field,"___41___ the aunt.

"But there's lots of grass in both fields."

"Well, perhaps the grass is better in the other field."

"That doesn't make any ___42___. Why is it better?" came the immediate question from Cyril.

The young man was looking unhappy. I imagine he doesn't like ___43___," the aunt thought.

"Come here, all of you, and I'll tell you a story," she said

The children did not look at all ___44___ by the aunt's offer. They'd clearly heard her stories before, and this one was very boring indeed.

"Oh, it's the most ___45___ story I've ever heard," said Cyril.

"Yes. I didn't even care to listen to it, "the younger girl said, and began ___46___ again

"You're not a great success as a ___47___," the young man from the corner suddenly said to the aunt.

Just then, the bus hit a hole. The younger girl's toy fell off the seat and rolled toward the comer. Before she could reach it, the young man picked it up and ___48___ it to her. "Here you are, "he said softly.

Then, he turned to Cyril, who was still curious about the sheep, and said, "Maybe there's shade (树荫) in the other field — the sheep don't like the hot sun too much." Cyri's eyes ___49___. "Oh! That's a cool reason!"

The aunt smiled, realizing she'd been wrong the man wasn't ___50___: he just looked serious.

36.	A. back	B. corner	C. middle	D. front
37.	A. sadly	B. wisely	C. badly	D. proudly

Deep under the Pacific Ocean lie coral reefs colored by some algae that live with corals. Corals usually provide nitrogen (氮) to algae, and in return they get carbon (碳), which gives them energy.

In the early 1980s, a huge heat wave turned more than 90 percent of these corals a pale, lifeless white. And it was believed that about 50 percent of reefs with beautiful corals might disappear by 2030. Heat waves warmed up the same Pacific waters in the late 1990s and again in 2015-2016, but scientists noticed that these heat waves didn't influence the reefs as badly as the first. Maybe corals have found a way to adapt (适应).

Swimming to cooler waters is not a good choice for corals, for it makes them easily hurt by the changing climate. But corals are able to adapt. Some turn to those algae that can deal well with heat. Others can use rows of tiny hairs on their bodies to "fan" away too much harmful oxygen (O_2) let out by stressed-out algae. Certain baby corals change their own metabolisms (新陈代谢) in order to fight the warming waters. But all these adaptations can protect themselves only to some degree.

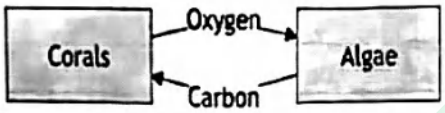

After studying and understanding these adaptations, scientists are trying to find ways to help corals fight. If researchers can make corals accept algae that can deal with heat pressure or if they energize genes (基因) that can deal with heat pressure, it will raise the corals' chance of living through future ocean heat waves.

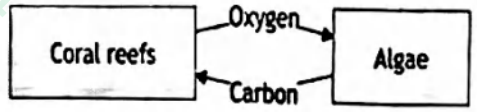

"When I go down to the sea and see a beautiful healthy reef with these colorful corals, I feel this pleasure of being in this underwater world," a famous biologist says. "It will be really sad to see it dead. But that does drive you to want to use your skills and your love to help fight."

61. Which picture shows the relationship among corals, algae and coral reefs?

A.

B.

C.

D.

62. What does the underlined part "the first" in paragraph 2 refer to?

A. The heat wave in the early 1980s　　B. The heat wave in the late 1990s.

C. The Pacific waters in 2015-2016.　　D. The reefs' disappearance by 2030.

63. What difficulty do corals face?

A. They are not able to swim to cooler waters.　　B. They cannot change their own metabolisms.

C. They cannot completely adapt to heat waves.　　D. They are unable to drive away harmful oxygen.

64. What can we infer from the last paragraph?

A. It's necessary to live with corals.　　B. The ocean has become unhealthy.

C. We should try our best to save corals.　　D. Making a study of the ocean is a must.

65. Which would be the best title for the text?

A. Corals Die Out　　B. Corals Fight Back

C. Corals Break Down　　D. Corals Come into Being

Recently, I've developed the good habit of resting my eyes properly during class breaks. My eyes always felt tired after long hours of studying Sometimes they even got dry, making it hard for me to follow the teacher in class. That's why I decided to take better care of my eyes. Now, when the break bell rings, I immediately put down my books. I either close my eyes gently for a while or look at the green trees outside the window. This small habit has made a big difference. Not only do my eyes feel less tired. but I can also focus better on my lessons. It's such a simple but useful habit that I'll stick to it firmly every day
