I used to be the "last-minute girl". I'd start my homework at midnight. I'd arrive at my soccer practice out of breath and late.

Then, on my 14th birthday, my aunt gave me a small box. Inside was a smart __36__ with a note: "Dear Emily, Time is your __37__, learn to get along with it. —Aunt Lisa." I stared at the little gift in disbelief. How could a tiny screen fix years of bad habits?

The first week, I totally __38__ it. Until one rainy Monday, something terrible happened. I overslept, __39__ the school bus, and forgot my science project. To my __40__, it gave out a low sound and showed: "8:00 AM tomorrow—Science project due.

Pack it tonight!" Wow! It got interesting.

Slowly, I began to __41__ it. The watch actually taught me. It broke big tasks into __42__: "Math homework: 3 problems now, 3 after dinner." It celebrated small wins with a happy face. Strangest of all, it recorded my sleep. "Don't be a night owl(猫头鹰)or a robot," it __43__ me to sleep when I stayed up late.

Days passed. My classmates noticed the __44__. "You're... on time?" my best friend Jake was __45__ shocked when I arrived early for his birthday party. Even my mom, who used to call me "an unorganized time-user" stopped __46__. "Whatever that watch is doing," she said, "keep it up."

But the real __47__ came during the Speech Contest. Old Emily would have written the speech the night before. New Emily let the watch plan a two-week practice schedule. On the contest day, as I stood backstage, my hands __48__. The watch vibrated(震动)softly and a preset message flashed: "Breathe. You've prepared 37 hours for this moment." I smiled, walked onstage, and spoke about my journey with time. When the judge announced my first prize, I __49__ my watch and its face showed: "Proud of you!"

Potato's Surprising Origin(起源)

Scientists have discovered that the potato may be a"child" of the tomato and a potato-like wild plant. Potatoes are one of the world's most important food. However, improving it is difficult because it has few kinds of genes(基因). Researchers say this new discovery could help to grow better potatoes by using genes from tomatoes.

Birds Help Raise Chicks

According to a new study in the magazine Nature, a bird called the superb starling develops long-lasting friendships. Researchers have studied the birds for 20 years and found that these birds, which live in Africa, help each other raise their young, even when they are not related. Scientists say we can learn from these birds that strong relationships are often built by helping each other.

More and more young people are buying indoor plants. Studies show that being around by plants can lower your heart rate and blood pressure. It's also good for how you feel. On the grasslands of Inner Mongolia, herder(牧民) Urbuusan, 37, and his 12-year-old son Degjiin practice Mongolian wrestling(蒙古式摔跤), or Bokh. They lock shoulders, trying to lift the other's arms and legs to push the other over. This silent challenge makes up part of their daily training as Mongolian wrestlers.

Deeply tied to the life of nomadic people(游牧民族), Bokh is one of the "Three Manly Skills" of the Mongolian people, along with horse racing and archery(射箭). Bokh is more than just a sport—it symbolizes strength, the spirit of not giving up, and honor.

Urbuusan has practiced Bokh for over twenty years, his strength and skill winning him more than 10 prizes. His skill and deep love for the sport now live on in his son. Since age six, Degjiin has copied his father's moves, learning step by step. He has grown from a watching child into a promising young wrestler.

Urbuusan carefully encouraged his son's early interest. Since Degjiin's eighth birthday, he has brought his son to competitions in many areas. Back home, the clear proof of the boy's hard work shines brightly—a whole wall is covered with shining medals. Each one shows his growth and progress.

Now a fifth-grader, Degjiin practices with his father whenever possible and has become a member of his school's Bokh club. He dreams of stepping on bigger stages, and his strong will never weakens.

Since the industrial revolution(工业革命), people have worried that new machines would take their jobs. It's reported that AI could soon do a quarter of all human work, and, across Europe and the United States, about 300 million jobs might disappear.

_____★_____. Experts point out that jobs requiring human qualities, like understanding feelings and creative thinking, are likely to stay.

Martin Ford, a writer who studies the future of work, says three types of jobs may remain safe in the near future. First are truly creative jobs. You're not just copying or doing things the same old way, but you're coming up with new ideas and building something new. Note that "creative" here does not mean simple art; a robot can already study millions of pictures and copy their style. It means deeper creativity, like designing a brand-new medicine, writing a new law, or planning a business model no one has tried.

Second are jobs where you work closely with people, like nurses, teachers, and reporters. These are jobs where you need a very deep understanding of people. This remains a challenge for AI. A nurse calms a scared child and a reporter can win trust from a stranger. Work like these needs heart, not only rules. It'll be a long time before AI understands how to build relationships.

Third are jobs that need quick hands and sharp eyes in messy, changing places. Think of jobs like fixing lights, repairing cars and machines. These are the kinds of jobs where you're often dealing with a new situation all the time.

In short, getting jobs in active and changing environments that include unpredictable tasks is a good way to avoid job loss to AI. At least, for a while.

61. What worries people since the industrial revolution?

A. They have more jobs to do.　　B. AI spreads slowly in Europe.

C. Machines are useless.　　D. New machines influence jobs.

62. Which of the following can be put in ____★____?

A. Many jobs will be taken over by AI　　B. It's been a while to prepare

C. We have to use AI properly　　D. Not all jobs are at risk

63. According to Martin Ford, _____.

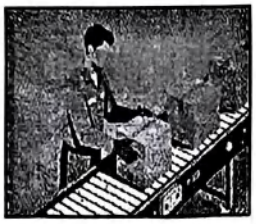

A. deep creativity matters a lot　　B. humans copy new ideas from AI

C. AI understands human connections　　D. Simple art forms are the best

64. Which picture shows the job that may be easily taken by AI?

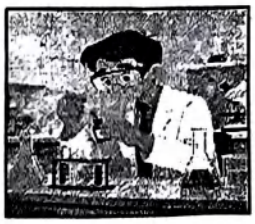

A

D

65. What's the passage mainly about?

A. AI's progress in changing situations.　　B. Humans' advantages in work.

C. Examples of jobs lost to AI.　　D. The history of creative jobs.

Emojis(表情符号) have become an important part of modern communication, with 10 billion sent every day! Whether it's __71__ happy face, a little heart or a thumbs-up, these small symbols play a key role in how people worldwide communicate in messages and online.

Even though there are so many emojis, some are used __72__ (many) times than others.
